PLASTICS & RUBBER WEEKLY

8 August 2008

While this may look like a bed of nails the company that produced it describe it as a “sustainable” and “ergonomic” plastic design.

And Ammique, the UK company behind the alternative and unconventional bed, is now planning to open a sales office and showroom over the pond.

The bed comprises of plastic pegs – precision engineered plastic components – that contour to the curves of the body and react instantaneously to movement. The pegs are attached to stainless steel extension springs, which help ensure long life as the Ammique bed has a life time guarantee.

Ammique argued that the bed is more hygienic than conventional designs as it is easier to clean and there is greater airflow between the parts. It added that its long life means it is better for the environment than throwaway mattresses and can incorporate state of the art technology such as light and audio visual systems.
